Introduction

Introduction

Oil and natural gas are vital resources that play a central role in the global economy. They are the primary source of energy and a key driver for various industrial sectors around the world. In Iraq, oil is the backbone of the national economy, representing the main source of government revenue. Iraq holds massive reserves of crude oil and is ranked among the world's top oil producers.

Basra, located in the far south of Iraq, is the heart of the country's oil and gas industry. It is home to some of the largest oil fields, including Rumaila and Zubair, the latter being one of the largest oil fields in the world in terms of production. Rumaila alone produces over 2 million barrels per day, making Basra a key hub in the global oil market.

Basra is also supported by advanced infrastructure, including export ports like Umm Qasr, and facilities for oil storage and refining. These assets enhance Iraq's ability to export oil in large volumes.

From an economic perspective, oil and gas form the backbone of Iraq's economy, accounting for more than 90% of total government revenue.

The sector also creates thousands of jobs and drives growth across other industries like manufacturing, transportation, and energy.

Natural gas is another promising resource in Iraq. The country holds large reserves in various regions, offering a great opportunity to develop associated gas industries and achieve self-sufficiency in energy.

With its rich reserves and strategic location, Iraq—particularly Basra—is a key player in the global oil market, attracting international companies eager to invest in its oil and gas sector.

As new extraction and production technologies evolve, Iraq is well-positioned to increase its oil output sustainably, strengthening its global economic standing.
